THE STAR ROSE MAGAZINE FOR ROSE LOVERS EVERYWHERE

The Biggest Flower Show in the East

Travelers along U. S. Route 1 at any time in July, August, September and early October can treat themselves to one of Nature's most brilliant spectacles by stopping just south of West Grove, Pennsylvania, for a look at the vast rose fields. This is rose country . . . broad, gently rolling fields which are resplendent in the summertime with the beauty of millions upon millions of rose blooms. It is a breathtaking sight, an eye-filling sight—one which the imagination finds difficult, if not impossible, to grasp, for it is the beauty of one rose multiplied by infinity. The beauty of it all, as we say, is that the passerby is welcome to stop and feast his eyes and soul.

The rose plantings are laid out in large blocks with grass strips between them so that it is easy to drive one's car right alongside the roses for firsthand observation. Many people make this an opportunity for taking pictures in color, and it can be taken for granted that in many a winter-bound living room the showing of these rose fields on a projection screen almost literally turns the bleakness of winter into the beauty of summer, for a moment at least. From Nova Scotia to Key West on the eastern seaboard, there is no comparable expanse of rose beauty, and a visit here in season is always a worthwhile and rewarding experience.

Springtime Is Rosetime

Roses and springtime go together like love and marriage, and, as the song says, "You can't have one without the other." You can't, that is, if you have an eye for the beauty of the Queen of Flowers. It is conceded that some gardeners prefer other flowers to the rose, but they are in the minority.

With springtime just about upon us, it seems wise to remind you that there is a best way to plant a rose, and that your reward from your rose garden will be the greater if you do it right. The instructions you receive with your package of rose plants give you in detail all the information you need about digging the hole and preparing the soil, as well as actually planting the rose. It occurs to us, however, that something should be said here toward a clearer understanding of the importance of doing two things in particular: 1. Keeping the roots moist during the planting operation, and 2. Hilling up the canes after planting.

Remember that the plants you receive in spring have lain dormant, or in a sleeping condition, since they were harvested last fall. Under closely controlled conditions of humidity and temperature, they have been maintained in that state until you actually received them. Even in transit to you, the root systems in their polyethylene wrappings have been preserved properly moist. They should go into the ground this way, too! A good way to keep them away from drying air, sun and wind is to put the roots in a bucket of muddy water until you are ready to plant. They'll keep 2 weeks.

The second point is equally important, perhaps even more so. It is where a good many rose gardeners go wrong, possibly because they do not understand why the canes should be hilled up. The reason is not the obvious one; that is, to protect them from a possible late frost. Roses newly planted in spring should be hilled up in order to keep the canes from drying out and shriveling during the two weeks or so in which the roots are getting established. Until the roots are established, the canes receive little or no sustenance from them. They are in this period particularly susceptible to damage resulting from exposure to air, sun and wind. The safe and sure thing to do, therefore, is to protect the canes by practically burying them with soil. This can be removed when the first shoots are seen to be pushing themselves through that soil. When you see the new shoots, you know that the roots are providing food and that the plant is ready to fend for itself.

The picture above needs no explanation. And come to think of it, neither does the one below! Both are good examples of the proverb about one picture being worth a thousand words. (Editor's comment: although there is some truth in the proverb mentioned above, in defense of any writer it must be said that the proverb itself is not painted but written!)

Do you think that your favorite rose color is the most popular? Let's find out.

Color is an elusive quality. I think you will agree with that statement if you have ever tried to carry a color "in your eye" long enough to match it at the paint store or the draper's shop. The difficulty seems to be that each basic color has a thousand tones or shades, and each of them has a qualifying name or number. So—not being color experts or technicians—you and I resort to what seems to be a reasonable solution by likening a given color to something we know; and we call it "spinach green" or "sky blue" or "buttercup yellow."

ABOUT ROSE COLORS AND WHICH IS MOST POPULAR

By THE EDITOR

These are loose descriptions, but they seem to convey something of what we mean when we use them. In much the same way where rose colors are concerned, all of us, I think, tend to lump together all colors in simple classifications such as red, yellow, white, pink. Where, for instance, is the dividing line between deep pink and light red? Rather than thrash the question out in our own minds, we are likely to want to forget the fine gradations and settle for what it pleases us to call the category itself.

I happen to like red roses best. If your favorite is yellow and that of someone else is pink or white, it should be of interest to all of us to find out whose favorite is most popular. With this in mind, I dug into our rose sales records for the fall of 1958 and the spring of 1959, realizing as I did so that the results might be more surprising than world-shaking.

Taking each of the more than 100 varieties of roses on our list, I classified it in one of the following groups: red, pink, yellow, white, multicolor, lavender, orange and tan. Then, by taking varieties in each color group and adding the individual sales figures, I arrived at a total number sold in each color group. Translating these figures into percentages of all roses sold gave the scores for each color.

According to sales of Star Roses then, the most popular color is not red (as I thought)—nor yellow—nor white—but pink!

Our pink varieties represented 31.8% of total sales. Next in line were the red roses with 24.9%; followed in descending order by the yellows with 15.7%, the multicolors with 9.5%, the white roses with 9.2%, the orange blends with 4.5%, and finally the tan and the lavender roses with even smaller percentages of the total.

Another way to look at it is to compare the individual sales leaders; and taking the 15 best selling varieties, we find that 5 were pink, 4 were red, 2 were yellow and 2 multicolored, 1 was orange and 1 was white.

Another interesting fact is that among the 15 best selling roses 14 were Hybrid Teas and 1 was a Grandiflora. A reason for the preponderance of Hybrid Teas among the leading sellers may lie in another quality in roses apart from beautiful color. I refer to shape or form of both bud and bloom. Taken by itself, good form in a rose can be mighty appealing whether or not you like the color of that rose. Taken together, good form and your favorite color become totally irresistible. Apparently, a good many other people think so, too. To point that up for you, I have included on this page a photo of Confidence whose outstanding form and lovely pink blend of coloring make it one of the leading 15. Hybrid Teas as you will remember, are noted for distinctive form and good size.

As for rose popularity quite apart from color, the figures show that after Hybrid Teas, the Floribundas, the Climbers, the Grandifloras and the miscellaneous kinds come next in that order.

One thing no figures could show, and a good thing, too, is why some people prefer one color and some another. In this matter, as in all matters of personal taste, feeling and opinion, individual choice is what makes life interesting. What a dull world it would otherwise be!

This thought has been expressed in many languages and in many ages of civilization. For instance, the ancient Romans said, "De gustibus non est disputandum;" the modern French say, "Chacun à son goût;" in English it all means, "Every man to his own taste."

An Honest Rose

by JOHN MILTON

While reading an advertisement recently for one of the small foreign cars, I was struck by the obvious sincerity of the message, and by one phrase in particular—"This is an honest car." The car itself seemed to back up this claim, for it appeared to be sturdy, dependable and well made, and I was favorably impressed. In this connection, I could not help thinking of another expression which has, I believe, a good meaning for all of us . . . "handmade." I suppose our impression of it is favorable because what is handmade is thought of as being skillfully made, carefully made, pridefully made. Such things carry something of the maker in them—a part of his spirit and personality, and all of his desire to make it well. He knows that its quality will speak for his craftsmanship.

The more I thought of the matter, the more it seemed to me that our roses are an honest product, too. In fact, they are (with a kind assist from Mother Nature) practically handmade! I do not mean to imply that we do not use machines of one kind or another, such as plows, tractors, cultivators, sprayers and the like. But the art of rose growing is far from being what Industry calls "automation" or automatic manufacture by machines alone. Our one claim to this sort of procedure is a kind of electric eye which has always performed well and nobly without a human hand touching it . . . that is, the Sun on which our roses depend for energy.

However, good, honest rose growing does call for much hand work. The three pictures illustrate three areas of our work rather well. At the top right—a seed hedge from which we gather seeds by hand for use in growing some of our understocks. At the center—a field of seedlings on each of which an "eye" or bud is grafted by hand. At the left—the end result, the package which you receive and which is packed by hand.

TO THE SEEDLINGS

TO THE

There are many other operations in growing roses which call for skilled use of hands, and, of course, of the knowledge, experience and personal interest of the man whose hands they are. Among these jobs are such as grading the roses, pruning them, labeling them accurately, storing them correctly and many more.

Of all these hand jobs, perhaps the most interesting to tell you about, and surely one requiring a most exacting kind of personal skill, is the budding operation. It is difficult even to imagine how this job could ever be done automatically by machine, but equally incomprehensible things have happened! This work calls for two-man teams. One of the men, called the "tie-boy" (although he is no boy), precedes the second man who is called the "budder." The tie-boy bends the seedling over and wipes the shank clean (the trunk just above the ground). The budder, using a very sharp budding knife, then cuts into the outer bark of the shank, making a T-shaped cut. Then, slicing an "eye" from the rose budwood which he is grafting, he inserts the "eye" in the T-cut. The tie-boy then fastens a special plastic patch or covering over the grafted "eye" to protect the graft from air and moisture until the "eye" actually grows onto the shank of the seedling. The "eye" will grow through the plastic covering, and a new rose plant comes into being.

You can readily see, I think, that I am right in calling our roses "handmade." You will at the same time understand, I am sure, that there is no shortcut to growing quality roses; and that in order to have the finest it is possible to grow, we must put into the growing all that is needed in the way of good growing practices, beginning with properly prepared soil and ending with the most modern packaging. And throughout, the dextrous use of skilled and knowing hands.

When you receive a box of our roses, you can plant them with confidence. They are honest roses.

SOME OF OUR ROSE GROWERS

It might be of interest to readers of Success with Roses to know something about a group of our rose-growing employees and the distinct contribution they have made, and do make, to our success as rose growers. We refer to the 25 or so Puerto Rican Americans who work with us, and to their special aptitude for the kind of work they do. From time to time in these pages, we have given you a thumbnail sketch of a member of our staff or of a department foreman. We are pleased now to spread the credit for good rose growing over a wider area by telling you about our Puerto Rican friends . . . how they came to us and why we're glad they did.

It all started in April of 1949. There was an emergency that spring in the fields, and we needed a dozen extra field hands in a hurry. Little did we know then that eleven years later we would still have with us some of that original group, and more besides! In effect, we "borrowed" that emergency crew from neighboring farms and mushroom growers. The men had been doing seasonal work there which had more or less ended, and the switch from one employer to another was easily made. It was not long before we discovered that there were good reasons why our Puerto Rican American workers would turn into excellent rose growers once they had a little experience.

One reason was that in Puerto Rico they were used to farming and had a liking for outdoor work. Another was that they adapted themselves quickly to the demands of their new work. A very important reason lies in the physical make-up of the Puerto Rican American in general; for although he is relatively small in stature, he is very wiry, seemingly tireless, and unusually quick in action. His hands, in particular, being small, are adept at such skilled jobs as rose budding which requires sure handling of a sharp knife, the bud tie and the delicate bud itself.

Although at first there was something of a language barrier (the native Puerto Rican American speaks Spanish), today communication is easy; for our islanders have taken readily to mainland America's way of life, many of them now speaking English quite well, many marrying and having families, most living in their own or rented houses whereas formerly they lived in camps or barracks, and just about all of them owning cars. All this is quite a change for the better for everybody concerned. Our Assistant Rose Grower, Ed McCummings, for instance, recalls that once he actually "lost" 15 of his Puerto Rican American workers because of language difficulties. He'd told them to do a certain job in a certain field. When he went to check on them, he couldn't find them anywhere! They'd misunderstood his instructions and gone to a totally different area.

Under the leadership of one of their own number, who came to us first in 1949, our Puerto Rican American rose growers have successfully bridged the gap between life and work on their native island and in their adopted home state, Pennsylvania. They have made the transition with credit to themselves. Their leader, whose picture is at the left, is Francisco Feliciano, known to everybody as Frisco. The photo above shows a group of Frisco's men working with roses.

NEW

Grandiflora

★GOLDEN GIRL. Grandiflora. (Meiland.) Plant Pat. 1912. You will not find anywhere a yellow rose to equal this splendid new beauty. The flowers are well formed and of good size—4½ inches across. You get many, many, many of them, for this vigorous plant is exceptionally productive. It looks good, too. Bushy, upright and well branched. There is a nice touch of perfume in the flower, another quality that's not hard to take. The bud is sleek and lovely. There's no doubt of it—Golden Girl is the best yellow rose today, the new classic in this bright, cheerful color. $3 ea.; 3 or more, $2.65 ea.

★PINK PEACE. H.T. (Meiland.) Plant Pat. 1759. We knew this one was good, but the country's gardeners took to it with such enthusiasm last season that we were truly amazed! It is enormously vigorous—tall, upright, well formed. Its strong canes bear a profusion of fine foliage, and each stem holds a huge, solid flower in rich, solid pink that does not fade. Each of the 60 or more petals is outlined delicately by the merest touch of lighter color. Strongly fragrant, too! Many flowers. A great new rose! $3 ea.; 3 or more, $2.65 ea.

Royal Velvet

... Huge NEW
Ruby-Red Beauty

★ROYAL VELVET. H.T. (Meilland.) Plant Pat. 1911. A whopping, eye-popping new, ruby-red rose that's made of velvet and that keeps its gorgeous color. 55 to 65 thick, solid petals make a very substantial flower. Tall plant with strong canes and good foliage. Grows vigorously and bears the blossoms freely. The massive quality of the flower and the fine, rich, exciting color combine to give Royal Velvet impressive character. You'll find a great deal of garden pleasure with this new rose beauty. $2.50 ea.; 3 or more, $2.20 ea.

★ROYAL VELVET

★GARDEN PARTY. H.T. (Swim.) Plant Pat. 1814. Upholding the tradition of its parents, Peace and Charlotte Armstrong, this splendid rose also captured an All-America Award. Its big, finely sculptured blooms are a combination of soft pastel colors . . . its rich ivory at the center giving way to creamy tones and finally to a flush of apple-blossom-pink. Garden Party has 25 to 30 enormous, flaring petals, and blooms come in rapid succession on a tall, strong, vigorous plant. Handsome foliage adds to the attractiveness of the bush. You'll be charmed by the beautiful bud and the full richness of the open flower. $3.50 ea.; 3 or more, $3.10 ea.

I AM happy to bring to your attention on these and the next few pages some of the very fine Star Roses, Delphiniums and Mums which we are offering this spring. Your Star Rose catalog for 1960 is more complete; but you may order from these pages if you wish. The order blank lists all varieties still in supply. BEAUTIFUL COOL SHASTA DAISIES

These are perfect accent plants for any perennial garden . . . showy, snowy masses of bloom which give you much in return for the planting. Place them to set off the reds and blues and yellows of your other plants. Shastas are hardy, vigorous, wonderful bloomers and fine for cutting. Try them this year.

HORACE READ. This is the pure white beauty with the big, double, rounded blooms and the dark green foliage. It grows 18 to 24 inches tall on stout, erect stems and delivers many fine flowers. It's truly gorgeous! $1 ea.; 3 for $2.75.

Here's How To Have Garden Color From Spring To Fall

by S. B. HUTTON, JR.

You might think that anyone who works as closely as I do with ornamental plants every day would have little inclination to have a personal garden. But the fact is that there is something about Delphiniums which is so attractive to me that I never fail to plant a few of them each spring close by the house where I can see them grow. My interest in the beauty of Delphiniums was vindicated a few years ago when on an impulse I entered one of my Delphinium spikes in the local flower show. I happened to be in the big Rose Barn on our property while the flower-show entrants were busy setting up their arrangements; and on the spur of the moment, it occurred to me to go home, cut a spike of Delphinium and enter it in the show. To my own surprise and the chagrin of some of the local ladies, my bloom won the award for Best Specimen Flower!

BLUE JAY

My enthusiasm for this flower has remained steadfast. My liking for it, however, is closely challenged by a fondness for Shasta Daisies and Mums. These three are entirely different in character, and yet thoroughly worthwhile as garden plants because, taken together, they give you beautiful color from springtime to frost. I don't know of any other plant or combination of plants, except roses, which can offer so much and be so satisfying to the home gardener as Delphiniums, Shasta Daisies and Chrysanthemums.

Let me tell you why I like them separately—and then you will see why I think they are exactly right as a trio to plant in spring.

The Pacific Hybrid strain of Delphiniums comes in many tones and shades of blue and purple, as well as in white. The big spike of the flower is made up of many florets, or small individual flowers, each of which has at its center a small "bee" or spot of color which is usually of a contrasting shade. Imagine such a spike of beautiful color to be as long as 3 feet, and standing in the garden on a strong stem also about 3 feet in length. The effect is almost unbelievable . . . an ornament of Nature which always draws admiring comment about its wealth of color and its perfection of form. There's nothing niggardly about blooms like these either, for each spike, opening at the lower end first and then progressively upward, will give you its beauty for a whole month!

I like Shasta Daisies, on the other hand, for different reasons. Like the Delphinium, they have a personality—but of another sort . . . pure and shy, rather than bold and flamboyant. The flowers, depending upon the variety in question, are entirely white or white with a golden center—the general effect, however, being white as seen from a distance. These are frosty, cool flowers which offer the right accent for the blues of the Delphinium. Each of the two acts, in fact, as a natural foil for the other, which is why they are such naturals together in the garden. Growing to 1½ to 3 feet in height, the plant bears many flowers all during the summer, adding a suggestion of coolness to the garden. The blooms, some of which are composed of broad, flat petals in ordered rows and others of rounded petals which go every which way, are 3 to 4 inches across—sturdy, substantial flowers with long-lasting quality. They make fine cutting.

I have personally hybridized a number of Mums and am fond of them as a garden plant, too. Delphiniums and Shasta Daisies give me the color I like in the late spring and all-summer garden; but when mid-September comes, and from then until hard frost, there is nothing like the Mum for color. In addition to pinks and white, Mums provide real autumn colors—rich bronze, deep red, strong yellow, orange, coral, almost any color you can think of as being right for this time of year. The plants are durable, vigorous and easy to care for. They produce prolific quantities of flowers, enough for armloads of beauty for the house. Another thing with Mums—you can choose the neat Pompons, the Large-Flowered Mums, the exotic Spoons, the huge Football Mums, and now the new Harvest Giant Mums, according to your preference.

With these three plants in the garden—Delphiniums, Shasta Daisies and Chrysanthemums—the gardener has a variety of color from June all the way through until hard frost kills the last Mum. This is a long season, a worthwhile and rewarding one. Whenever I am asked for a suggestion on what to plant if the object is flowers and color range, I invariably give the same answer . . . "Delphiniums, Shastas and Mums."

ANNUAL GARDEN CLINIC

Hundreds of interested gardeners attended our Annual Garden Clinic on September 20 at the Red Rose Barn. There to answer their questions and to demonstrate ways and means to better gardens were representatives of such nationally known firms as DuPont and the makers of Weedone, Hollytone and other products. A good many people brought in samples of their garden soil for a free acidity test. Everybody was given a free rosebud. This event is becoming more and more popular each year. Below is a typical scene at one of the demonstration booths.

TWO NEW STAR ROSES WIN ALL-AMERICA AWARDS

We are delighted to be able to mention that two more Star Rose introductions have won All-America Rose Selections Awards—Sarabande and Fire King, both of which are 1960 winners. Three of our roses have won the most wanted award in rosedom, the All-America, since 1958. White Knight took the honor that year.

Both of the current winners are Floribundas. You'll find descriptions of them on page 13 of this issue of Success and even fuller ones in your Spring catalog. Sarabande is one of the "winningest" roses of modern times. Before taking the All-America in the U. S. A., it won the Gold Medal at the famous Bagatelle Gardens in France; the First Certificate in Rome, Italy; the Gold Award in Madrid, Spain; the Gold Medal at Geneva, Switzerland; the "Most Beautiful Rose of France" Award at Lyons, France. It has since picked up the City of Portland Gold Award. Fire King came in second to Sarabande in several of the competitions mentioned.

Our own John Lemon, Vice-President in charge of Star Rose Licensee operations, has been honored by the All-America Rose Selections membership which elected him to a Vice-Presidency. Membership in this elite group of American rose growers is

STAR ROSE PEOPLE GET AROUND

Sitting safe and snug in your own little corner of the world is no way to broaden your outlook or to learn much about the business you're in. This being so, our own Star Rose executives may be said to be a very enlightened lot, for several of them did quite a bit of business traveling during the past year. President S. B. Hutton, Vice-President S. B. Hutton, Jr., Vice-President John Lemon and Garden Center Manager Hiram Johnson all made separate and independent trips to the West Coast. Actually, John Lemon made the trip on two occasions. George Hart, our Rose Consultant, flew to Texas where he spoke at the annual meeting of the Texas Nurserymen's Association. Most of the West Coast trips centered in the rose-growing areas of California and Oregon, and their purposes ranged from the presentation of our two All-America Winners for 1960 to the press, to observation of western rose-growing methods. Hiram Johnson's trip included visits to numerous California garden centers. Other ports of call during the year by our staff members included Chicago, New York and many more, the business being annual conventions of nurserymen, meetings of the All-America Rose Selections and the like.

MEILLAND VISITS STAR ROSES

Alain Meilland, son of the late Francis Meilland, great French rose hybridizer, and two of his business associates were our guests at Star Roses last summer. While in America, they visited numerous points of interest, including Niagara Falls and the Grand Canyon. They became acquainted with hot dogs and hamburgers, western saddles and a home-grown earthquake. After a 10,000-mile tour, they returned to West Grove in time to attend the formal presentation here of four new Meilland roses on the occasion of Red Rose Rent Day. From the right, below: S. B. Hutton, Alain Meilland, Raymond Richardier and Michel Tournier.

JOHN LEMON ELECTED VICE-PRESIDENT OF AARS

tantamount to universal recognition as an outstanding expert on roses. Being an officer puts icing on the cake. We knew about John Lemon's calibre all along. His many friends across the country will applaud his election.

Star Roses in 1959

S. B. HUTTON, JR. ELECTED

S. B. Hutton, Jr., Vice-President and General Manager of Star Roses, and known throughout the nurserymen's world as "Beany," has been elected to a Directorship of the American Nurserymen's Association. (Editor's Note: as we see it, the power cog of our local machinery has become a Big Wheel nationally.)

RED ROSE RENT DAY

The 228th anniversary of Red Rose Rent Day was observed here on September 12, 1959, with suitable pomp and circumstance and a great deal of holiday-type interest on the part of everybody concerned. There was a sort of festive air to the occasion which was contributed to by the day itself, which was ideal, and by the 1500 or so people who attended, all of whom had at least one thing in common—an interest in roses.

Many of them brought picnic lunches and ate in the Grove, many more purchased box lunches at the big Rose Barn, while 150 special guests lunched at famous old Red Rose Inn.

After lunch, all congregated at the tent under the tall trees for the rent-paying ceremony and the formal introduction of four new Star Roses. Mr. George R. Clark, President of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society, representing Star Roses, paid the rent of one red rose to Miss Amy Penn-Gaskell Hall, a direct descendant of William Penn.

We were fortunate in having with us Alain Meilland from France, the son of the late Francis Meilland, famous French hybridizer of roses. Our new roses, all of which are Meilland originations—Royal Velvet, Fire King, Golden Girl and Sarabande—were introduced in that order by Mrs. Frederick Lang of the Potomac Rose Society, Mr. Fred S. Glaes of the American Rose Society, Mrs. Edwin Montgomery of the West Grove Garden Club, and Mrs. M. R. Sinclair of the West Jersey Rose Society.

It was a grand occasion which was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

BIGGER-BETTER ROSE STORAGE FACILITIES READY

In our efforts to serve you better, we don't stand still. A sample of our steady forward movement is the building shown below—new, larger storage facilities all under a single, shiny aluminum roof. There was a race against time to complete the new building before the rose harvest, and we won! What the new building means to you may seem remote. However, it enables us to keep even better control over conditions of humidity and temperature, which is necessary in the proper storage of roses from harvest time to shipping time. In short, it helps us to keep our quality standards high; and this, in turn, is a benefit to you. This building, along with our already streamlined shipping facilities, gives us greater efficiency from the field to the post office—a strong step ahead.

MOVING DAY NOT FAR AWAY

Over the years, many of you have visited us at West Grove and have, perhaps, seen or been in our office. It should interest you, and perhaps others, too, to know that now after all those many, many years, we are abandoning the old stable and carriage house which has been our office and will soon be moving into a modern glass, steel and aluminum building. Quaintness may have its virtues, but it seldom is efficient; and in these days of speed, efficiency is a necessity. So—we give up the stable, the harness room, the hay loft and the carriage house in favor of all-on-one-floor modernity complete with acoustic ceiling, fluorescent lighting, air conditioning and the rest . . . a building designed for its purpose, which is to handle our business with you better and better. We are looking forward to moving day.

ALL-IN-ONE-DAY

Many people who came to see our rose fields in bloom last July through September went from here to famous Longwood Gardens, only a few minutes away; and from there to the wonderful, formal rose gardens of the Church Farm School, a half hour farther on. It's a satisfying all-in-one-day tour.
